FROM OUR MUSIC WORSHIP LEADER...

Are you a parent? Do you volunteer or teach in the Preschool/Children or Youth ministry in some capacity? Do you teach school or mentor a child or teenager? If so, I encourage you to mark your calendar AND sign up for Highland's Parenting Conference on February 28th. Libby and I have put our heads together to think of ways we can support parents, families and volunteers that are in constant contact with our preschool, children and teens at Highland.

Let's face it, raising kids in today's society can be frightening. Wrong is called right, smartphones replace human interaction, families are broken, children aren't maturing as quickly as in the past, or maybe they're too far advanced for their age. In our fast-changing culture, parenting can sometimes feel like a losing battle. We want our beloved children to grow up into a life of godliness and morality, but our children won't drift into that kind of life by accident. Because of the morally bankrupt world we live in, it takes a great deal of intentional parenting to provide structure and spiritual handrails to guide our children towards lives submitted to God. The greater culture hangs on what happens inside our home. We don't need to be afraid to step up and lead our children. Our decisions won't always be popular with our kids. But I think someday, our kids will thank us for being parents.

Times are different and behaviors have changed greatly over the last 20 years. What has always worked in church life, as far as behavior modification goes, has changed tremendously. Local Psychologist, Dr. Stephanie Cooper will come and share great tips and strategies for raising kids and supporting families in today's world. There's a great need in our church and young families for new ideas on how to discipline, encourage, and pray for our children. Because children are all so different, the same strategies don't work on all of them. So, let's all get together for an afternoon of great advice and be encouraged to step up and lead our children to a life of godliness both inside and outside the four walls of the church.

Did I mention there would be good snacks and some awesome giveaways?? You can register on the Highland website or through the link provided on the Kids Ministry Facebook page!
